Effective plea on behalf of human rights in the ACHPR

The CFDA has made a written submission about the current situation in Algeria to the African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights (ACHPR). The submission regards a new law that could reduce the space for civil society and the opposition in the country.

The current Algerian government has introduced several new laws in recent months, which have caused concern among human rights organizations and civil society groups. Among these laws is a new one that targets civil society organizations, which could limit their ability to operate and express their views. The CFDA has been actively involved in monitoring these developments and has made a submission to the ACHPR to alert it to the potential human rights implications of these laws.

The CFDA submission to the ACHPR highlights concerns about the new law’s impact on civil liberties, freedom of expression, and the ability of civil society organizations to function without interference. The submission also raises concerns about the possible chilling effect on human rights defenders and the potential for these laws to be used to harass and intimidate those who speak out in support of human rights.

The ACHPR is an independent and impartial body mandated to promote and protect human rights in Africa. The CFDA submission to the ACHPR is part of its ongoing efforts to ensure that the rights of human rights defenders in Algeria are respected and protected. The CFDA is fully committed to working closely with the ACHPR and other international human rights organizations to monitor the situation in Algeria and to support efforts to ensure that the rights of all citizens are respected and protected.

Publication of an article on reform adopted by the Algerian government

Readers may notice a new article on the CFDA’s website. The article discusses the recent reforms adopted by the Algerian government and their potential impact on human rights in the country.

The article highlights the importance of the reforms in promoting a more democratic and open society in Algeria. It notes that the reforms are a positive step towards the establishment of a more just and equitable society. However, it also cautions that the reforms must be implemented in a way that respects the rights of all citizens and that they are not used to suppress dissent or opposition.

The article also emphasizes the need for continued monitoring and engagement by human rights organizations to ensure that the reforms are effective and that they lead to meaningful changes that benefit all citizens.

The CFDA is committed to working with the Algerian government and civil society organizations to support the implementation of the reforms and to promote a more just and equitable society in Algeria.

Fifth human rights training course in Algiers

The European Union and the Ministry of Justice of Algeria organized a fifth human rights training course for legal practitioners at the University of Algiers. The course was designed to enhance the capacity of legal professionals to provide effective and independent legal representation to human rights defenders.

The training course focused on the protection of human rights defenders and covered topics such as the right to freedom of expression, the right to peaceful assembly, and the right to a fair trial. The course included lectures and practical exercises to support the development of skills and knowledge in these areas.

The CFDA has been actively involved in the training course and has shared its expertise and knowledge on the protection of human rights defenders. The CFDA has been working closely with the Ministry of Justice and the European Union to support the development of legal professionals in Algeria and to promote a more just and equitable society in the country.

In conclusion, the CFDA is committed to working with the Algerian government and civil society organizations to promote the protection of human rights and to support the implementation of reforms that respect the rights of all citizens. The CFDA is committed to continued engagement and monitoring to ensure that the reforms lead to meaningful changes and that the rights of all citizens are respected and protected.

CFDA CONTACTS

www.algerie-disparus.org

PRESS RELEASES

For more information, please contact us.

CFDA CONTACTS

CFDA CONTACTS

www.algerie-disparus.org

PRESS CLIPPING

For more information, please contact us.

CFDA CONTACTS

CFDA CONTACTS

www.algerie-disparus.org

YOUR SUBSCRIPTION

CFDA CONTACTS

CFDA CONTACTS

www.algerie-disparus.org

YOUR SUBSCRIPTION